

Get your FAQs straight from the Strike Hardship Fund and Member Needs Committee

At the start of bargaining, management said they wanted a quick settlement and suggested economics-only bargaining (bargaining only salaries and benefits). Our team was open to this, but only if management guaranteed one statewide economic package that treats all campuses equally. Instead, they gave us a proposal that divides the campuses and includes drastic takeaways. It seems they are digging in for a long, contentious fight - rather than offering a fair statewide package.

What is the Strike Hardship Fund and Member Needs Committee?

The committee helps raise funds before a strike happens by hosting food drives, bake sales, and pizza fundraisers. The committee also helps distribute the funds among our members in need during a strike

What can I do now to avoid a strike?

Continue to show solidarity with your co-workers, participate in workplace and campus actions, and sign a strike pledge to give our bargaining team the power to win the best contract possible. Signing a strike pledge is an indication of your intentions, but there are more steps to take before a strike could be called.

What if I can't afford to strike?

For that very reason you can't afford to not strike. Management is proposing step freezes, health insurance cost increases, and very little in COLAs.

How long do strikes last?

Strikes can last a while. Recently, the GTFF strike lasted eight days.

If the strike lasts long enough will there be strike benefits?

Yes. Each month, $.50 per dues payer is placed in a Strike and Job Protection Fund with 30 cents allotted solely to pay benefits in the event of a strike. These benefits don't kick in until after a full week on strike.

The Bottom Line

What is the financial impact on you if we strike? It's very likely you would start the strike with a normal, full paycheck, with the effects of the strike being felt in the paycheck following the strike. Prepare for the strike by setting aside as little as $10, $20 or $50 a month to cover lost wages incurred during a strike. START NOW!
